Craig A. Miller, MD

Chief, Vascular Surgery, Margaret Pardee Memorial Hospital, University of North Carolina

Craig A. Miller, MD, is Chief of Vascular Surgery at the University of North Carolina's Margaret Pardee Memorial Hospital.

He attended Northwestern University and the Ohio State University College of Medicine. He then completed his General Surgery residency at Ohio State and fellowships in Gastrointestinal Research and Vascular Surgery at the University of California, San Francisco.

Dr. Miller was one of the first Michael E. DeBakey Fellows of the National Library of Medicine in 2017. He is the author of The Making of a Surgeon in the Twentieth Century, which is in its fourth U.S. edition, and The Big Z: The Life of Robert M. Zollinger, M.D., which was nominated for the Welch Medal of the American Association for the History of Medicine as the finest book on medical history of 2015. His next book, A Time for All Things: The Life of Michael E. DeBakey, will be published by the Oxford University Press in November of this year.

Centennial Physician Marquee Honoree

Michael E. DeBakey, MD

Michael Ellis DeBakey is known internationally as a cardiovascular surgical pioneer. First and foremost a surgeon, he was also an inventor, a scholar and a medical statesman. In a career that spanned seven decades, he developed many of today's standard surgical treatments for cardiac and vascular disease.

Dr. DeBakey received his bachelor degree from Tulane University in 1930 and his medical degree from the Tulane University School of Medicine in 1932.

During his surgical training, he perfected the "roller pump," a device that allows blood to continuously flow during operations. Used initially for blood transfusions, that same device would be used two decades later in the first open heart surgery as part of the heart lung machine. The roller pump was the first of more than 50 surgical instruments Dr. DeBakey developed to repair hearts and arteries.

During World War II, Dr. DeBakey volunteered for military service. He served in the Office of the Army Surgeon General where he worked to collect and analyze data on soldiers' care and craft Army medical policy. He was awarded the Legion of Merit in 1945 for his work.

Dr. DeBakey further organized a medical center system to treat soldiers returning from war and proposed a systematic follow-up of veterans with certain medical problems. These institutions are now known respectively as the Veterans Administration (VA) Medical Center System and VA's Medical Research Program.

In 1948, Dr. DeBakey was recruited from the Tulane University faculty to become the chairman of the Department of Surgery at Houston's Baylor College of Medicine. Over the next half century, he would become that newly independent medical school's first President, then Chancellor and finally Chancellor Emeritus, presenting diplomas to three generations of graduating medical students. In the 1950's he joined the staff of Houston Methodist Hospital. Over his six decades at Houston Methodist, Dr. DeBakey would perform over 60,000 surgeries, train thousands of surgeons and author or co-author over 1,300

published articles.

Early in his career, Dr. DeBakey held a pivotal role in the establishment of the National Library of Medicine under the second Hoover Commission as part of the Medical Task Force. He was essential to the Texas Medical Center's evolution into the largest medical complex in the world, personally recruiting physicians, researchers, and administrators, and developing innumerable innovations in care. His achievements read as a series of medical breakthroughs: development of the first artificial grafts for vascular surgery, the first removal of a blockage of the carotid artery and the first patch-graft angioplasty. In 1969, he was awarded the Presidential Medal of Freedom with Distinction and in 1987 President Ronald Reagan presented to him the National Medal of Science. In April 2008, in accordance with an Act of Congress, Dr. DeBakey received from President George W. Bush the Congressional Gold Medal.

Dr. Michael E. DeBakey passed away at Houston Methodist Hospital in July 2008, bequeathing to the future a legacy of groundbreaking advancements in the field of cardiovascular medicine.
